The fingers throughout the Archduchy of Canberry.

Have found that most things are now quiet and contained, with the exceptions of some areas near the northwestern border of the Archduchy.

In the Northwestern border areas however, there is talk among villagers that they seeing apparitions and that they feel they are being watched in a way they have not previously been.

Other border areas seem to have quieted.

The situations in the cities are generally good.

There are still challenges in outlying areas about the preserved food for winter due to lost abundance of salt, BUT local squires and barons and so forth are handling that. Presuming that the winter is not longer than normal, they should pass through this without the danger of famine or food shortage.
